I love to paint. I love what comes out on the canvas, even when I struggle with the process. Sometimes I stop painting because I'm stuck. Sometimes it's because I don't have a specific project. But sooner or later nothing can take the place of painting. It calls me back and I can only deny that calling for long.

Each time I return to the canvas after an extended absence I am amazed at the feeling. Something empty inside me fills up again. The brush dips into the paint and touches down on the canvas and suddenly a form emerges. That feeling is why I paint...
